

May 24, 1812

Dear President Madison,

My name is Sally Smith and those British are really starting to frustrate me. My brother Sam has already been forced to fight for the British over in Europe, just because they captured his ship. Not only that, but my husband was fighting them Indians when he was travelling up north for some furs and he came back all battered and bruised. The British must be helping them out and given them supplies because they were quite strong. And finally, won't the people in British North America be happy to finally to be free from the grasps of the British monarchy? We have a duty to set them free and give them what they really want. If these issues continue, you will have to do something about it as our President.

Sincerely,
Mrs. Sally Smith